Are you thinking of giving your kitchen a facelift? Don't forget about the plumbing. It is an integral part of your kitchen. You need to find plumbers who not only provide functional kitchen plumbing but also ensures that the plumbing compliments your entire kitchen décor and furnishings.

Plumbing components in the kitchen usually consist of three main things: fresh water pipes, appliances, and a drainage system.

Fresh water pipes are the pipes coming from the city's main water supply. They get into your house through the mainline, and will often make the first branch at the water heater. The mainline is consistently under high pressure, and thus needs to be made from materials that can withstand the pressure. Fixtures are the components in your kitchen that use the fresh water. They include dishwashers, faucets and taps. When installing fixtures, it is important the plumber adheres to regulations sets by the relevant board. The drain system consist of everything going from kitchen fixtures and appliances to the sewer.
