

DIY Disasters: Why a Professional Plumber is Cheaper Than a Garden Hose

The people who rigged these catastrophes thought they were saving themselves money by not paying a plumber to fix or install hardware. But in the end, the guy who didn't use a P-Trap under the kitchen sink was probably wondering why his kitchen always smelled like sewage.

What's a P-Trap, you say? A P-Trap is just one kind of piping that traps gases and prevents them from seeping out by maintaining a bit of water as a seal. U-Traps and S-Traps serve the same purpose. Don't be the person who uses an old vacuum hose under your sink, or a piece of a garden hose to replace a flex pipe. Find a small leak at the base of your toilet? You might think a bit of caulk around the base will do the trick but it could be a lot worse. Chances are, it's a simple fix, but everyone knows that it's the smallest things that prove to be the biggest problems, and that is especially true for plumbing. Even a small leak could mean taking the entire toilet off of its base to find the problem. That's where a professional plumber comes in.

A plumber can help you figure out where the leak is coming from, or why your bathroom is always damp, even when you're not using the shower. Plumbers can help keep your home safe from or mildew, wood rot, and even prevent you from making the mistake of putting an electrical outlet right next to your tub.
