

What Is the Most Environmentally Friendly Method of Disposing of Your Waste?

Whether you're a homeowner cleaning up after a DIY home improvement project, a tenant clearing out a rental property after a long lease or a construction company with ongoing waste management needs, disposing of the waste your activities produce in the most environmentally friendly way possible, like hiring skip bins in Perth with West Bin, is of the utmost importance.

Fortunately, disposing of waste in an eco-friendly way is easy in developed countries like Australia and everyone can dispose of the waste they produce in a way that minimises the ecological and environmental impact of their lives at home and at work by correctly recycling recyclable materials.

Recycling – Australians are Lagging Behind

Everyone is familiar with the concept of recycling, with most people recycling regularly, but how up-to-date with what can be recycled are you? Although a high percentage of household waste is recyclable, statistics show that we're doing a very poor job of recycling the waste our lives produce.

For example, across Australia only about 20% of all plastic packaging is recycled, which means we could recycle five times as much plastic as we currently are. With the average Australian producing around 1.5 million tonnes of waste annually (that's a lot in comparison to most populations around the world), it's obvious that there's a lot more that most of us could be doing to recycle our waste.

Waste Processing and Management

Along with recycling the waste our daily lives produce by sorting it into the correct recycling bins, we can ensure that all waste produced at work and home is disposed of in an environmentally friendly way with the right skip bin hire in Perth. By choosing West Bin, a leading skip bin company with our own council approved and Department of Environment licenced waste processing facility, you can ensure that your waste is expertly sorted and disposed of in the most environmentally friendly way.

So, how do we do this?
