DRINK DRIVING

Drink and drug driving offences can result in the disqualification of your licence, a criminal conviction, a fine and in some cases a term of imprisonment.

There are a large range range of drink and drug driving offences. We will explain to you the elements of the offence and can advise you when making your decision to plead guilty or not guilty.

Losing your license can result in the loss of employment. Not having a drivers license can severely limit your ability to travel to where you and your family need to go.

If you have been charged it is important to obtain expert legal advice before you attend court. Being legally represented at court can help you get a better outcome than if you represented yourself. This may mean the difference between keeping your licence and being disqualified by the court.

We will help you in preparing for court by enrolling you in a Traffic Offenders Program and provide assistance in the preparation of your character testimonials. We will help you obtain any evidence that may assist you in getting back on the road sooner. This may include medical and psychological reports.

Lamont Law routinely appear in court for drink and drug driving offences. We know how to prepare for court and we know what to say in court to get you the best possible outcome in your circumstances.
